

MORE PSYCHIATRIC FICTION

SEPTEMBER 11. I like to scan new published papers in psychiatric journals and check out the latest babble.

For example, in the current issue of Comprehensive Psychiatry, we have a paper entitled, “History of childhood attention deficit/hyperactivity disorder [ADHD] and borderline personality disorder [BPD]...”

The paper indicates that there is a significant correlation between ADHD in childhood and BPD in adulthood.

Translation? Kids who have ADHD tend to have BPD when they grow up.

Further translation? ADHD and BPD are two disorders that have never been found to have biological or chemical causes. They are invented fictional entities, derived from a scatter-pile of so-called symptoms.

Therefore? Kids who have been diagnosed with the fictional entity called ADHD tend to get diagnosed with the fictional entity called BPD later on.

It’s called the “closed-circle trick.” You make a connection between two lies within a system that is built on lies, and you pretend you are connecting two truths. Based on this absurd reasoning, you prescribe toxic and disorienting drugs.

Am I denying that some kids and some adults have problems? Of course not. But you would be surprised at how many of those problems resolve when the actual causes are found. Those causes may be nutritional deficiencies. They may be inattentive parents. They may be terrible schools. They may be overexposure to chemicals in foods...

For a blistering and mind-blowing analysis of the false foundations of psychiatry, I recommend Dr. Peter Breggin’s landmark book, Toxic Psychiatry. Breggin is himself a psychiatrist. He has stepped back and viewed his own profession. He covers the waterfront from A to Z. He proves beyond a shadow of a doubt that psychiatric disorder-labeling is a form of lunacy, and he also proves that the whole panoply of psychiatric drugs is a massive bed of poison.
